Dream (actually george tho lol)

by cloudfarmer \(crunchylightbulbs\)

Summary

On movie night, Dream falls asleep. He also accidentally leaves his phone unattended. What is George supposed to do, not hijack his Twitter?

Notes

As he taps his fingers mindlessly along the armchair of the couch, George fixes his eyes on the clock hanging on the far wall.

Right before George had officially moved in, he and Dream had gone on a last minute “date” to the homeware store. Random kitchen utensils, appliances - anything that was apparently needed for living in a proper adult house with your boyfriend. When they’d passed through the aisle lined with all sorts of clocks and other ornamental pieces, Dream had grabbed the first one he saw and set it in their shopping cart. George had immediately rolled his eyes and made a snide comment about how it was the twenty-first century and they both owned phones that were perfectly capable of telling the time, but Dream had refused to back down. So now, there it hangs above their living room TV.

George still thinks it was a stupid purchase. Again, they have phones, but also - it’s ugly. Nothing but a large white circle that doesn’t even have actual numbered markings, just black metal dashes and plain clock hands, all in the name of simplicity and modern minimalism. All it really does is make it way too hard to figure out the time, which is counterproductive when that is literally a clock’s only purpose.

It’s big, ugly, and useless. But he and Dream bought it together, so even now while gazing up at it while he waits, George can’t help but smile.

God, when did he become so sentimental.

“Dream?” George finally calls out, letting his head fall back against the couch in a lax attempt to better project his voice into the kitchen where his boyfriend is still apparently taking his time. The movie they both agreed to watch is ready on the TV, which it has been for the last ten minutes. “If you’re not in here in under twenty seconds I’m breaking up with you.”

After that, it only takes a few moments for Dream to pad into the living room with a bowl of popcorn looking thoroughly unimpressed.

“You know everytime you use that threat it becomes less effective.” He says with a pointed look, sinking into the couch at George’s side and wordlessly handing him the bowl.

George plucks a few pieces of popcorn from the top and puts them in his mouth with a smile. “Hm, the eleven seconds you took says otherwise.”

Dream snorts and shakes his head, shifting from his seated position at his side to lying horizontally across the couch with his head pillowed on George’s shoulder and chest.

In already the first ten minutes of the shitty action movie they'd picked out, Dream begins to slip. His propped up position against George's side quickly turns into using his thighs as a pillow, and by fifteen minutes, he's covering his yawns and rubbing his eyes every few seconds just to keep them open. By twenty? It is completely lights out.

Though this is technically meant to be a date night and falling asleep kind of kills the vibe, George doesn't really mind. He knows his boyfriend is prone to working himself to death, so really, having him sleep at all is a miracle.

Quietly, George sets the already empty popcorn bowl off to the side on the coffee table, wiping his buttery fingers on his sweatpants before settling a gentle hand in Dream's hair. Softly, he begins to stroke through the strands, smiling when he feels his boyfriend subconsciously shift to press even closer into his touch. But while Dream shifts getting more comfortable, George's eyes catch a flash of silver from something sticking out of his sweatpants.

George's fond smile quickly morphs into a shit eating grin.

Oh, this'll be fun.

I KNEW IT

It's in the middle of passionately typing out a colourful string of curse words, that there's a sudden movement in George's lap. He immediately freezes, fingers hovering over the keys as he glances down to see his boyfriend cracking open a single bleary eye.

"George?" Dream groans, voice low and husky with sleep. "Wassuh upde movie?"

George can't help but laugh at Dream's sleep induced delirium. "Pardon?"

"The movie," Dream tries again, shifting his around more in George's lap to face him, but still keeping his eyes half shut. His eyelashes flutter, but it's unlikely he's seeing anything but a blur. "It's finished?"

"Yeah," George says softly, setting Dream's phone aside and placing a hand on Dream's face, tracing a thumb lightly over his bottom lip. "Finished almost an hour ago."

Dream winces, eyes fluttering close again as George continues to softly stroke his face. "Sorry. You should've woken me."

"No it was fine," George says, unable to stop the amusement leaking into his tone. "I made my own fun."

At that Dream stiffens, immediately pushing up out of George's lap to sit up and face him properly.

"Why do you sound so smug?"

George inwardly curses. Damn Dream for being able to read him so well.

George quickly lunges forward to press a quick kiss to Dream's lips. "No reason."

Dream doesn't look entirely convinced, but he doesn't bother to argue. Instead his eyes flick to George's lips, face betraying his thoughts. George just laughs, curling a hand around the nape of his neck and pulling him in for another kiss.

"Don't worry," He whispers against Dream's lips, "there's lots of time for explanations later."

Dream's confusion is swallowed by George's mouth pressing against his own, and like the absolutely simp he is, immediately forgets about anything else.

Until a couple hours later, of course.

Dream @dreamwastaken
